'pvn' is a critical part of the digital virtual water networks because it carries large amounts of water in the short-term and long-term periods. Its infrastructures are capable of mobilizing water from its source to distribute the required amount of water to each consumer. Other benefits of using 'pvn' are the ability to use the computer or the mobile device as a medium of distribution, the management of the geographical information through the automatic control of water levels and the application of water quality standards. On the other hand, long-term planning is used to plan the operation of these systems at the proper time. For example, water recirculation can be scheduled to occur at night because during the day it is unlikely to find people at home and the water levels and the water quality will be reduced. The authors of this study believe that computerization is the best option because it enables the managing to implement changes in real time. At the same time, the use of social networks to find addresses, conduct research or obtain necessary information are also applicable to the project. Especially, since the use of digital virtual water networks is still in its infancy, the future is unknown. Therefore, it is important to analyze the management of data and digitalization as a critical factor. I would like to thank Professor Muhammad Aly Halim for his support and help in editing this work.
