Tuesday, January 18, 2013 8 things I wish I'd done differently in my art career Sometimes we just need a little break. This post is by far the hardest one to write because it is fairly close to my heart. I've been pondering this post for a while and I hope you'll find it relatable. A break is what it takes to recharge your batteries! This art career has been a whirlwind of activity and more is definitely coming in the near future. I'm going to be traveling a lot over the next six months to present my work and I've been thinking a lot about how I want to approach this. Here are a few notes I have been thinking about as I move into this next phase of my career: 1. Get out of your comfort zone This is a lot easier said than done and not just because I say it. As far as the business aspect of my art career, I'm still very much in the process of finding myself. Take a deep breath and go outside of your comfort zone. Expose yourself to different perspectives and learn from them. I'm going to use my art as a form of therapy to see how I can help others by my words or drawings. The next few months will be great in that regard as I take on an international audience. I have all my work around my current themes and I'm hoping to make a connection with each one of them. 3. Get to know your coworkers This is a given. You're going to need help and by that I mean people you work with. There are two ways to go about this: Look them up. This method is pretty good because it means you'll get to know them better. Make sure to introduce yourself! Go to events. There are usually events such as shows, signings, etc. where you can get to know them better. I think it's a good idea to go to an event before asking them to be in your work. It's also a good way to get to know people and to make any introductions. 4. Learn some other skills This is as far as I'll go. I will never stop learning new things, but I'd like to be able to look back with pride in my work and say,

"She had said that she had run out of gas," said one of the women who was in the car with her. "We got out the car and she started choking and sputtering, and her eyes were rolling in the back of her head. We called 911." The woman thought her friend had used a steroid or an anabolic steroid — possibly testosterone, she said — and was trying to get her to stop using it. "My friend told me about this trouble she was having," she added. The emergency response, however, appeared to be less than speedy. Though the women were able to get the airway and breathing open in some way, by the time medical crews got there, the woman could not be revived. She was taken to Lawrence Memorial Hospital. Another woman, who also declined to give her name, said that she had been working at the restaurant and that the manager had asked her to drive the two women to her hotel. Before she could get them to the hotel, they left the restaurant and had begun driving around, smoking pot and possibly drinking, she said. "It was an accident," she said. "The other girl, she wouldn't have died if we would have gotten to the hotel." Adrian Chase is a staff writer for the Times-Tribune. He can be reached at achase@thetimes-tribune.com. Effect of temperature, angiotensin II, and angiotensin IV on Na/H exchange activity in human red blood cells. The effects of acute cold exposure, angiotensin II (All), and angiotensin IV (AIV) on pH_i in human red blood cells were investigated. pH_i was measured in samples of cells prepared from blood taken from healthy subjects on three different days with the fluorescent dye 2',7'-bis(carboxyethyl)-5(6)-carboxyflu 6d1f23a050
