(more...) » Q: C++ library - wrap functionality in new object instance I'm looking for a way to put functionality from a library into a new object type to be used within my code. Right now, the library is simply a sample implementation of something that could be included in a future project. For example, I have an object type Time that needs access to the time in relation to some reference frame. Time is just a dumb container that is specific to this project and the library doesn't have a concept of time measurement. (All it has is a single 'hours' and 'minutes' field.) However, the library does define the class referenceTime (Time with a few more fields), which contains methods that I can use to calculate reference time offset. What I want to do is take the Time class and wrap all the methods and fields in the Time class as attributes of a new referenceTime class. Basically, I want to essentially mimic the logic in referenceTime inside Time. That way, I can run the same method on Time with referenceTime and the logic will work the same way. Of course, I can't put a referenceTime instance inside Time (which is a dumb object container), but I can make it an attribute of Time. My problem is that I can't figure out how to make referenceTime an attribute of Time. The easiest thing I can think of is giving referenceTime a constructor that takes in Time and initializes the Time field. The problem with that is that the constructor will 0cc13bf012

The objective of this study was to evaluate the efficacy of telemedicine as an alternative modality of care delivery for the care of newborns in the immediate postpartum period. This descriptive, observational, cross-sectional study evaluated the samples of mothers at the Emergency Room and the Neonatal Care Unit of a public teaching hospital in the state of Mato Grosso do Sul, Brazil, between March and June 2012. The sample comprised 54 mothers/guardians, 27 of whom used telemedicine to obtain the care service and 27 used conventional care. Results showed that the mothers from the telemedicine group had more significant symptoms after the birth than those from the conventional care group; however, the differences were not statistically significant (p=0.093). Mothers of the telemedicine group had higher scores for all indicators of the Apgar scale than mothers of the conventional care group (p=0.01). After telemedicine, three babies had a health problem; after conventional care, there were five babies who had health problems. There was a statistically significant difference in the number of failures in the first 90 days after birth (p=0.03). Based on this study, it was observed that telemedicine is a potential alternative to conventional care for the care of newborns. Q: Theory behind MySQL adding a join table in between the other two tables I have been wondering for a long time what MySQL do when we add a join table in between two other tables. For example, in my table we have: SOME_TABLE id | name 1 | a 2 | b JOIN_TABLE id | from_id | to_id 1 | 2 | 2 This JOIN_TABLE is being added to the actual table that we have. But I am confused about the storage engine MySQL uses and the reason why it adds this JOIN_TABLE. Does anybody knows? Thanks.
