You could visit the fifth page to get the similar result, motorolacpscommercialseriescpr0513 But if you want to get the similar result with our engine, here it is: Query1 = "SELECT * FROM table1 WHERE x = :x" Query2 = "SELECT * FROM table2 WHERE t = :t" Query3 = "SELECT * FROM table3 WHERE x = :x" Query4 = "SELECT * FROM table4 WHERE a = :a" cursor.execute(Query1, ("b", 1)) cursor.execute(Query2, ("s", 1)) cursor.execute(Query3, ("a", 1)) row = cursor.fetchone() if row: cursor.execute("SELECT * FROM table2 WHERE t=:?", ("s", row["t"])) row = cursor.fetchone() if row: cursor.execute("SELECT * FROM table3 WHERE x=:?", ("b", row["x"])) row = cursor.fetchone() if row: cursor.execute("SELECT * FROM table4 WHERE a=:?", ("a", row["a"])) row = cursor.fetchone() if row: print "Selected Row from Above" else: print "No row found" A. It might be the engine you choose, which might be limited regarding its feature set. Your own sqlite example can be used as a good example. Using this you get the wanted result, the query engine needs to be stopped once and only once. The cursor.fetchall() returns a list where every element is a tuple. The difference to your own example, is, that the row you search for is only appended at the end and not at the position in the list, where it should be. package main import ("fmt" "net/url" "os" "github.com/deislabs/yarp/api" "github.com/de
